Kennedy Tank & Manufacturing Co.

833 E. Sumner Ave. • 317-787-1311 • www.kennedytank.com

Kennedy Tank & Manufacturing Co. was founded in 1898 by Patrick W. Kennedy, an expert boilermaker who repaired boilers and fabricated steel products. In about 1915 his son, William, joined the company and guided the manufacturing side of the business toward gasoline tanks for filling stations. He opened a plant in Owensboro, Ky.

His son, William Jr., joined the family-owned firm in the mid-1940s and steered the company toward designing and building complex storage tanks and pressure vessels. The 1960s brought the addition of expanded services with the erection of large field tanks at work sites. The 1960s and '70s saw an expansion of the repair business to include high-powered utility boilers. This focus continues today as Kennedy Tank provides 24/7 full-service boiler and mechanical maintenance for Midwestern utility and power plants. The 1970s also brought more fabrication diversity as tanks were produced from various alloys.

Patrick W. Kennedy joined the business in 1978 and in 1993 became the fourth-generation family member to lead the company, a role he continues to fill. The mid-1980s brought the addition of designing and fabricating heat exchangers for industrial applications. Kennedy Tank has expanded its capacities over the past 20 years, and steel fabrications of more than 200 feet in length and weighing as much as 400,000 pounds have been built at this facility.

One of Kennedy Tank's unique assets is its diversity of products and services. From standard tanks to specially fabricated storage and process tanks to pressure vessels and huge columns that may stand 200-plus feet tall and weigh more than 200,000 pounds, Kennedy Tank has the answers to “big” problems.

Carter's My Plumber LLC

886 N. State Road 135, Suite A, Greenwood • 317-859-9999
www.cartersmyplumber.com • info@cartersmyplumber.com

Bob Carter started plumbing when he was a youngster and opened his own business in 1969. He worked for several builders doing new construction work.

His son, Jamie, grew up watching his father do plumbing and decided it was a good fit for himself. He started to work with his dad while still in high school and later made it his full-time career.

Together they incorporated Carter Plumbing, and Jamie pursued his passion in the service sector of the business.

As tradition has it, grandson Kelson grew up watching his dad and grandpa in the business. Upon completing high school he decided to give plumbing a try.

So, from grandpa to dad to son, the plumbing tradition has turned into a Carter legacy three generations old.

There is one thing for sure about all three Carters, they are particular about their workmanship.

Stress can have a powerful impact on children’s health

Dr. Sarah Stelzner
Pediatrician at Eskenazi Health

Stress can greatly impact our children’s health. When we think of the health needs of our children we often just think of the physical aspects of health. How serious is that cough? Is her hearing and eyesight normal? Does he feel hot?

Important evidence now suggests that the mental health of a child is as equally or in some cases more important and can more greatly impact a child’s physical health. The American Academy of Pediatrics and others are calling for more effective and aggressive intervention for children in distress.

A term has been coined called “toxic stress,” the response when a child experiences strong, frequent and prolonged adversity. This may include physical or emotional abuse, chronic neglect, caregiver substance abuse or mental illness, exposure to violence, and the accumulated burdens of family economic hardship that is coupled with inadequate adult support.

To put it simply, it is how the body responds to these events and not the stressful event itself. Health and policy leaders have begun to examine ways to address this growing problem. The academy has launched the Center on Healthy, Resilient Children to help pediatricians and others identify toxic stress in children and connect them with appropriate resources.

Research suggests that providing high-quality early childhood education and care is important. Support for parents is also critical as in many of these cases the parents experienced the same stressors in their childhoods.

So what can be done? First, it is important that parents do not ignore their mental health. If parents are stressed, it is likely that their children are stressed as well. To first help your children, you need to help yourself. Second, having a strong support system is important.

So the next time you visit your child’s pediatrician, talk about your child’s mental health. Check and see if there are any resources that might be beneficial for your family. In addition, if you have not seen a doctor recently, schedule an appointment. Your overall health greatly impacts your child’s health.
